Copyright agreement

By signing this release, the author confirms and guarantees on behalf of themselves and any coauthors that they hold all copyright in and titles to the submitted contribution, including any figures, photographs, line drawings, plans, maps, sketches, tables, and electronic supplementary material (ESM), and that the article and its contents do not infringe in any way on the rights of third parties. ESM files are published online as received from the author(s) without any conversion, testing, or reformatting. They will not be checked for typographical or other errors or for functionality. Insofar as personal data of third parties (data subjects) are a subject of the article, the author confirms in particular that the data protection rights of the data subjects have been safeguarded during the collection and processing of personal data and do not conflict with publication. The author indemnifies and holds harmless the publisher from any third-party claims.

The author agrees on behalf of themselves and any coauthors, upon approval of the article for publication, to transfer to the publisher the exclusive right to reproduce and distribute the article and its contents, both physically and in non-physical, electronic, or other form, in the journal to which it has been submitted and in other independent publications, with no limitations on the number of copies or on the form or the extent of distribution. These rights are transferred for the duration of copyright as defined by international law. Furthermore, the author transfers to the publisher the following exclusive rights to the article and its contents:

1. The rights to produce advance copies, reprints or offprints of the article, in full or in part, to undertake or allow translations into other languages, to distribute other forms or modified versions of the article, and to produce and distribute summaries or abstracts.
2. The rights to microfilm and microfiche editions or similar, to the use of the article and its contents in videotext, teletext, and similar systems, to recordings or reproduction using other media, digital or analogue, including electronic, magnetic, and optical media, and in multimedia form, as well as for public broadcasting in radio, television, or other forms of broadcast.
3. The rights to store the article and its contents in machine-readable or electronic form on all media (such as computer disks, compact disks, magnetic tape), to store the article and its contents in online databases belonging to the publisher or to third parties for viewing or for downloading by third parties, and to present or reproduce the article or its contents on visual display screens, monitors, and similar devices, either directly or via data transmission.
4. The rights to reproduce and distribute the article and its contents by all other means, including photomechanical and similar processes (such as photocopying or facsimile), and as part of so-called document delivery services.
5. The right to transfer any or all of the rights mentioned in this agreement, as well as the rights retained by the relevant copyright clearing centers, including the corresponding royalty rights to third parties.

*Other guidelines apply for the following periodicals, which for the most part publish commissioned or other types of edited articles: Lernen und Lernstörungen, NOVAcura, PADUA, pharmaJournal, Psychiatrische Pflege, Therapeutische Umschau, Zeitschrift für Psychiatrie, Psychologie und Psychotherapie.

Guidelines on sharing and use of articles in Hogrefe scientific journals*

In general, articles published in Hogrefe's scientific journals* may be shared by faculty for teaching and training purposes at any time, as long as reasonable measures are taken to not allow open sharing of the final published version of record on the internet.

The corresponding author of each published article will receive free online access to the published version of record when the article is first released online. The author may download the PDF of the published version of record. It is provided for the author's personal use, including for sharing with coauthors. A typical journal article may be available in various versions: (1) the manuscript as originally submitted to the journal and before peer review (submitted manuscript); (2) the manuscript as accepted by the journal after peer review (accepted manuscript); (3) the final, approved and published version (version of record). Different guidelines apply to each version:

Submitted manuscript (before peer review): The manuscript of the article as originally submitted to the journal may be shared at any time. It should be labelled with the date the manuscript was prepared and should also include a statement that the manuscript in this form has not yet been accepted for publication.

Accepted manuscript (after peer review): The manuscript version accepted by the journal for publication may be shared and posted at any time after acceptance, including on authors' personal websites, in their own institutional repositories, in not-for-profit subject-based repositories, in scholarly communication networks (SCNs) such as ResearchGate or Academia.edu, in reference managers such as Mendeley, as part of a grant application or submission of a thesis or doctorate, and with individuals upon request for their personal scientific or other non-commercial research uses.

The accepted manuscript version that is shared or posted should include a link using the article's digital object identifier (DOI) to the authoritative version of record that has been or will be released on the publisher's platform, as well as a statement that "This version of the article may not completely replicate the final authoritative version published in [journal title] at [DOI]. It is not the version of record and is therefore not suitable for citation. Please do not copy or cite without the permission of the author(s)."

Final published article (version of record): The final version of the article as published in the journal (version of record) may be shared at any time with individuals upon request for their personal scientific or other non-commercial research uses and as part of a grant application or submission of a thesis or doctorate. The final version of the article as published in the journal (version of record) may not, however, be posted on websites or in repositories or shared in scholarly communication networks (SCNs) except with the express written permission of the publisher. Changing or modifying the article, and reproducing, distributing, or licensing the article in whole or part for commercial purposes, are not permitted.
